The recovering procedure is done in a matter of seconds, once it's completed you will see the list of recovered files. The application lets you choose from an array of options like MP3, WMA, JPEG, AVI, MOV, PDF, Excel, HTML, XLS, word,...Microsoft is allegedly building a phone that will run Android and Windows 10 Microsoft may be trying to separate itself from the big names of the operating system (OS) industry: Apple and Google. That may not be a good idea, as history shows. According to a report from Korean publication The Bell on Tuesday, Microsoft is allegedly building a phone that will run Android and Windows 10. Although the name of the company and the phone is shrouded in mystery, the report does say that Microsoft is building a wearable device with a 5.5-inch display and a 3,500 mAh battery. The phone will be the "first phone from Microsoft that takes Android operating system technology," The Bell reported. The report says that Microsoft is planning to provide users with two operating systems: one on Android and the other on Windows 10. Microsoft has been working with Google on what The Bell called its "Windows 10 Mobile OS-based Phone Project." The company is reportedly hoping to sell about 300,000 to 400,000 of the devices in its first year of sales. "The operating system is currently being tested, and as soon as it's finished, Microsoft will begin to sell it," The Bell reported. Interesting, isn't it? And only Apple and Google have managed to do it—the side-by-side use of another OS not only diminishes their market value and influence, but also increases their competition. In case you haven't heard, Google holds 86 percent of the U.S. mobile search market share, according to data from SimilarWeb. As for Apple, the company commands about 9.7 percent of the mobile search market, although the situation is changing. Apple's iPhone and iPad are combined and sold as one device. It probably won't take long before Microsoft realizes the market share of its OS is low and will follow the example of Apple and Google. Perhaps, the company has given up the claim that it is the best tablet in the world. It might be more important for Microsoft to change its business plan from operating systems to apps and services—the same strategy Apple is pursuing in the app and services space. Of course
